

TERRIBLE RESULT FROM INTOXICATION.—We learn that on Saturday last, Rufus Cobb, of Helliston, a man of intemperate habits, after having indulged freely in spirituous drinks for a day or two before, hired a borrowed horse and wagon and proceeded to Milford. He then applied at one of the taverns in the place for drink, but the landlord, seeing his condition, very properly refused him. It is believed, however, that he obtained liquor at some other place, as he was subsequently seen in his wagon on his way back to Helliston, in a very drunken condition. On the road he fell out of the wagon, while the horse was going along at a rapid rate, and his feet being entangled in the harness, he was dragged a distance of more than a quarter of a mile, in consequence of which his head and body became dreadfully maimed; so much so, that the wretched brute died yesterday afternoon. We are told that he was a man of respectable connections, about forty or forty-five years old, and has left a wife and five children to lament the terrible fate of the husband and the father.

Surely, the "public good" is not promoted by the retailing of intoxicating drinks.

THE EARTHQUAKE.—Havas papers of the 18th ult. state that a letter had been received there from St. Jago de Cuba, in which it is said that an earthquake was felt there on the 7th of the same month, and that it lasted apparently about four minutes. No lives were lost, but several houses were thrown down and the Cathedral damaged by the oscillations of the earth.

The Havas papers state a vessel had arrived there, the Captain of which reports that five leagues from Baracoa, at half past 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the 7th, his vessel received a shock as if it had struck on a rock, and he had no doubt that it proceeded from an earthquake, in which opinion he was confirmed by a repetition of the same phenomenon at 7 o'clock in the evening. THE LATE EXPLOSION.—We have some further particulars of the explosion of the steamboat Douglass. The disaster occurred at midnight.

All the passengers in the ladies' cabin were either killed or injured, except little girl. The boat was racing of the time. Among the killed, were the steward, Mr. Leonard of New Orleans, and a child of Dr. Hoffman, of Baltimore, in addition to several persons who were severely injured.
